and Reasons for the Nationalist Victory

CONSEQUENCES OF THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR (PART I)

- I. Estimated 500,000-700,000 killed in battle
- 2. Policy of limpieza ("cleaning up") followed by Franco: former Republic supporters received death, imprisonment or lesser penalties (about 250,000 ended up in prison camps)
- 3. Refugees poured in SW France, attempting to • escape Fascist rule
- 4.200 towns reported destroyed; ~250,000 houses left uninhabitable
- 5.60% of railway lines destroyed •
- 6. 5,000 churches burned down or badly damaged
- 7. Nearly 500,000 Spaniards went into exile (to • France, USSR and Latin America)
- 8. Spanish society remained divided until Franco's death in 1975 Basque and Catalan rights & languages suppressed; trade unions illegal; strikes suppressed

CONSEQUENCES OF THE SPANISH CIVIL WAR (PART II)

- 9. Hitler and Mussolini had been brought together through their military cooperation in Spain's civil war and on the non-intervention committee
- I0. Hitler & Mussolini's experiences in these regards taught them to expect appeasement and inaction from the Western democracies in the face of aggression
- II. Italy's commitment of troops in Spain assured that Germany could easily achieve Anschluss with Austria in March 1938 without hurting German-Italian relations

- 12. Germans used the war to train pilots for Blitzkrieg (later used in WWII)
- I3. It further demonstrated the ineffectiveness of the League of Nations in handling international disputes

SOME POSSIBLE REASONS FOR THE NATIONALIST VICTORY

- I. Franco was skillful in holding together under his own control the various groups opposing the gov't: Church, landowners, capitalists, monarchists, Falangists, etc.
- 2. There was less diversity among groups on the Nationalist side, but Franco was also skillful at defusing tensions within his own side.
- 3. The supportive comments of Pope Pius XI made it possible for the Nationalists to see themselves as crusaders fighting for a holy cause.
- 4. The Nationalists had a unified military leadership under Franco, and fought a single war. No single unified command was achieved by the Republic, so it fought a series of local campaigns w/ its men often unwilling to fight outside their home areas.

SOME POSSIBLE REASONS FOR THE NATIONALIST VICTORY

- 5. The divisions on the Republican side were fatal.
  (e.g., anarchists and Communists actually fought each other at times in Barcelona; infighting in Madrid in 1939 sealed defeat).
- 6. Republican generals were often inept (with certain exceptions) and worked at cross-purposes and in uncoordinated fashion much of the time.
- 7. The Republic had a volunteer army* (except for a brief period under Caballero), whereas the Nationalists commanded a regular army that grew with conscription.
- 8. Any attempt to impose stronger or more unified leadership on the Republican side was resisted by rival political groups because it was an obstacle to their own plans.

SOME POSSIBLE REASONS FOR THE NATIONALIST VICTORY

- 9. The foreign intervention was clearly more effective on the Nationalist side, particularly German and Italian intervention:
  - a) Germany and Italy provided many advisers and military units, and offered their supplies & services to Franco on credit (to be repaid later);
  - b) USSR provided important aid, but held back due to concerns about a possible Nazi attack on Russia, and insisted on payment in gold for all supplies & services.
- I0. By banning arms sales to both sides & following an agreement no one else observed, Britain & France actually deprived the Republic of weapons.

others, fought the lost cause for the Spanish Republic, while the Irish brigade (flag at bottom) joined the Nationalist efforts. Despite such enthusiasm, the Republicans were outnumbered during most of the war.
